Budgeting BASICS

When setting up a budget, it's easy to list all your major expense categories, like your rent or your student loan payment. The tricky part is keeping track of all those little extra expenses—the ones that most people forget to include in their budget in the first place.

SNEAKY EXPENSES TO KEEP ON YOUR RADAR

SUBSCRIPTIONS Subscriptions that get delivered to your door and that tend to renew annually: Magazines

- · Personal shopping services
- Gift-of-the-month clubs

It's a new trend that many

WHY IT'S SNEAKY

people aren't used to including in their budget. With everything from designer shoes to pet toys available for monthly delivery, it can be difficult to categorize subscription expenses.

If your subscription renews

HOW TO BUDGET FOR IT

annually, figure out when the renewal date is. Then divide the cost of the annual subscription by the number of months until the renewal date—that's how much money you'll need to put away each month to keep that subscription going.

SUBSCRIPTIONS Digital media (movies, music and ebooks) that you access online and that tend to renew monthly: Media services like Netflix and Spotify • Ebook access like Kindle Unlimited

DIGITAL

- Tutorial sites like Lynda.com

Digital subscriptions are convenient and in many cases more affordable than purchasing individual albums, movies and books. That said, the total cost can add up pretty quickly if you're subscribed to several services at once.

their game-many offer free access to ebooks, digital magazines and

SAVINGS TIP

Public libraries have been upping professional resources.

pretty flexible—you can usually cancel and restart them at

Online subscriptions are often

HOW TO BUDGET FOR IT

any time. Take advantage of this flexibility by grouping your digital subscriptions together within your budget. If you need to free up an extra $30, it might be easier to hit pause on a couple of entertainment-related subscriptions than to squeeze that money out of another category.

Greeting cards and postage Little extras like gift wrap and balloons per type of gift (e.g., $20 for Special-occasion purchases for family and friends:

GIFTS

HOW TO BUDGET FOR IT Come up with a set amount

· Presents and gift certificates

a friend's birthday, $100 for a family member's Christmas out of your gift-giving budgetespecially when you start present) and stick to it. It might getting invited to weddings seem limiting at first, but it and baby showers. makes it easier to anticipate how much money you need to budget

> Some months tend to be more gift-heavy than others—wedding season and winter holidays, anyone? Setting aside an annual amount can be a good strategy.

for gifts in any given month.

SAVINGS TIP Use your DIY skills to reduce gift expenses—shop in advance, compare prices, and take advantage of online deals and free shipping offers.

· Eye drops and allergy relief

WHY IT'S SNEAKY Non-prescription health stuff is tricky to categorize since it's not exactly health care, not exactly toiletries and not exactly a frivolous expense.

Combine in-store offers with

SAVINGS TIP

manufacturer coupons (found in the weekly flyer or online).

HOW TO BUDGET FOR IT It's probably best to give these expenses a category of their own.

Regular purchases (think eye care or vitamins) should give you an idea of how much money you need to set aside each month, but consider contributing a little extra to cover those less-frequent purchases (like cold medication).

CROWDFUNDING Campaigns, projects and products

you contribute to online:

 Kickstarter campaigns Indiegogo projects

HOW TO BUDGET FOR IT

Crowdfunding is a very new type of expense, and depending on the type of project you're contributing to, it can feel more like a charitable action than a pre-order for a new product.

WHY IT'S SNEAKY

At the end of the day, your crowdfunding dollars are discretionary income. If it's an occasional expense, take it out of your fun money. If you enjoy backing projects regularly, treat crowdfunding like you would a hobby and give it its own category within your budget.

